Body Casting

"A body is one though it has many parts, and all the parts of the body, though many, are one body, so also Christ. For in one Spirit we were all baptized into one body." (1 Cor 12: 12-13)

God's goodness seems so unevenly distributed at times, in ways that can leave us frustrated, jealous, spiteful. We sometimes lose track of the good sense that reminds us of God's intimate, individual intentions on our behalf. As a result, we forget that we are enlisted as one key part within God's spiritual script.

Those who are baptized are charged to overcome dispersive tendencies that would tear us apart from one another. We resist looking upon the neighbor with a spirit of covetousness or, alternatively, with a sterile pity that affords us easy self-absolution. We refrain from curious regard for the prosperity or plight of another as a mere source of entertainment with which we quickly weary.

God's Spirit helps us rediscover our company in Christ. We dare not capitalize on distinctions that matter little in God's sight: distinctions such as who comes from within and who from without; who can purchase the E-Z pass of remote recognition and those whose needs for assistance are glaringly apparent; or those who nonchalantly return our favor versus those who press us to go further than our customary comfort zone would allow.

At baptism we are inducted into an organic reality that, far from being exclusive, is eminently elevated. The Church is the site where the universal call to holiness is realized, though only as each individual accepts that there is a personally elected role to undertake. The dignity of persons is intensified in the theater of faith. God's preferential option for the human is activated when we respond to a casting call from above. Our felt poverty of spirit should liberate us rather than paralyze us with spiritual stage fright. Justice and charity will then surge into the aisles, so that all might shine in the ambiance of the Son. We tend toward Christ, insofar as we are responsive to our baptismal calling, not by autonomous choice, but diversified and designated as God would have it.

God of my baptism, you help me slip beyond an isolating comparison of myself with others, and draw my attention to Christ. Grace me with a spirit of self-forgetfulness that accompanies my willingness to take up my part in the dramatic gap between what presently is and what you will to be performed. 1241

April 26, 2009: Third Sunday of Easter, Year B

Readings: Acts 3:13-15, 17-19; 1 John 2:1-5a; Luke 24:35-48

First Reading: Acts of the Apostles 3:13-15, 17-19

Peter's preaching in this passage explains the events of the Jewish Scriptures in the light of their fulfillment in Jesus Christ. The Jews had denied the Holy and Righteous One; they had killed the author of life, but God raised him; the apostles are the witnesses to that event. What response must the people give now? They must repent and be converted that their sins may be forgiven.

Responsorial Psalm: Psalm 4:2, 4, 7-8, 9

Psalm 4 is a confident prayer that God will make himself and his saving power known to us. Response: "Lord, let your face shine on us."

Second Reading: 1 John 2:1-5a

This passage intends to give a right attitude to sin which cuts us off from union with God. If we sin, our consolation is that the Risen Lord is the expiation for our sins. But we must first recognize our sinfulness, as well as accept the fact that God pardons us and restores our union with Him when we confess our sin. Observing the commandments is a sign that our love of God and neighbor is genuine.

Gospel: Luke 24:35-48

This appearance of the Risen Lord to the apostles builds upon his earlier appearance to the two disciples at Emmaus (Lk 24:13-35). First he appeared to them bodily, but they did not recognize him. Then he explained the Scriptures to them (v 27). Finally, they recognized him in the breaking of the bread (v 30), and only then did they begin to understand what they had experienced (v 32) and rushed to share their experience and joy with the others (vv 33-35). In today's passage, Jesus appears again to the assembled body of apostles, just as the two disciples were recounting their story. At first they are incredulous about the fact of the resurrection (thinking "they were seeing a ghost," v 37). Jesus proves the bodily nature of his presence by touch and by eating food (vv 39-43), but that is only the beginning. He opens their minds to understand the meaning of the resurrection through the Jewish Scriptures (vv 45-46), and then Jesus sends them to all the nations to preach and witness in his name about this new life ("repentance for forgiveness of sins," vv 47-49).

Part 2: continued from last week

St. Paul and the Resurrection

The Resurrection is the foundation of all we are

When contemporary Christians think of their own resurrection, they most often imagine the future reality of eternal life with God, however they conceive of that reality. Paul would certainly not deny the reality of our future resurrection to eternal life with God, but he also stresses the present reality of resurrection now.

In baptism, Paul says, we have shared in Christ's death and resurrection (see Rom 6). Our old self was crucified with Christ (see Rom 6:6) and a new self was raised from the dead so that: "just as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, we too might live in newness of life" (Rom 6:4). Paul describes this "newness of life" as dying to sin and living to God (see Rom 6:6, 11ff). The final outcome of this new life is future eternal life (see Rom 6:5, 22), but the main emphasis in Paul's words about baptism is not on future resurrection but on present resurrection -- "living to God."

Preaching about resurrection, whether at Easter or at baptisms and funerals, should reflect Paul's emphasis much more than it usually does. We misinterpret resurrection and mislead both Christians and others if we convey the idea that resurrection is primarily about "going to heaven when you die." Resurrection is first of all about new life here and now. It is about putting on Christ in baptism (Gal 3:27) and then doing so every day thereafter (Rom 13:14).

The Spiritual and Ethical Consequences of Resurrection

The significance for Paul of resurrection to new life could hardly be overestimated. On every page of his letters, he is urging his congregations to embody the new life they have in Christ. We may briefly mention three dimensions of this new life.

First of all, the new life we live is in fact the life of Christ within us. If Christ has been raised, then He is not dead but alive, and He comes to inhabit His people, both individually and corporately, to infuse them with His very life, which is in fact the life of God: "I have been crucified with Christ; yet I live, no longer I, but Christ lives in me" (Gal 2:19-20). Too often contemporary Christians underestimate and under-utilize the indwelling power of Christ.

Second, the resurrection to new life is, paradoxically, a life shaped by the cross. In being raised to new life, we do not leave the cross behind. Not only is our crucifixion with Christ an ongoing experience (again, Gal 2:19-20), but the very shape of the resurrection life is cross-shaped, or cruciform.

That is, the life that Christ lives in us by the power of His Spirit is an extension of the life of obedience to God and love for others that landed Him on a Roman cross. Christ's self-giving generosity, service and hospitality (see 2 Cor 8:9; Phil 2:1-11; Rom 15:1-3) continue their life in the life of His people.

Finally, the resurrection life is a countercultural existence that values the body as God's temple and is dedicated in mind and body to the service of God and others (see Rom 12:1-2). Unlike our culture more broadly, we Christians know (or ought to know) with Paul that our bodies belong to God (see 1 Cor 6:19-20) and that God will one day raise them (see 1 Cor 6:14).

Thus our bodies are to be offered to God (see Rom 6:12ff) in ways that reflect their dignity, purpose and final end. Good preaching and formation will consistently explore the implications of this kind of bodily resurrection existence on our sexual lives, our vocations, our use of time and money, and on much else. The resurrection, in other words, is the foundation of all we are and do. TP

St. Joseph Jr.-Sr. High
Day of Reflection
“Encountering the Risen Christ”

St. Joseph Jr.-Sr. High recently celebrated their Day of Reflection at the school. The students enjoyed an enriching and fun-filled day which included a prayer service, a dynamic keynote speaker, and break-out sessions.

During the breakout sessions, using the theme “Encountering Jesus in our School,” students were split into small groups and assigned the task of creating a skit showing how they might encounter Jesus throughout a normal day in school.

The day wrapped up in the school gymnasium with a message from Mr. Dallas Carter. Mr. Carter is a missionary and Theology teacher at St. Joseph School on Oahu. Mahalo Mr. Carter for volunteering your time and sharing your message with us!
